Background of the El Mozote Massacre

Historical Context of the Salvadoran Civil War

The Salvadoran Civil War (1980-1992) was a brutal conflict rooted in deep social inequality, political repression, and Cold War geopolitics. The government, backed by the United States, fought against leftist guerrilla groups like the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front (FMLN). During this period, human rights abuses were rampant, with both sides accused of atrocities, but the government's military operations, especially in rural areas, often targeted civilians suspected of supporting rebels.

The Role of the Salvadoran Army

The Salvadoran military was heavily involved in counterinsurgency operations, which included scorched-earth tactics and mass killings to suppress guerrilla influence. The army's approach often blurred the lines between combatants and civilians, leading to indiscriminate violence. The military's reputation was marred by numerous reports of massacres, disappearances, and torture.

Pre-Massacre Tensions in El Mozote

El Mozote, a remote village in Morazán Department, was believed to harbor guerrilla sympathizers. The area was under suspicion, and the military conducted operations to root out insurgents, often resulting in the destruction of villages and the displacement of residents. Tensions escalated as the army's presence increased, setting the stage for the tragic events of December 1981.

Estimates suggest that approximately 800 to 1,000 people were killed during the massacre, though exact numbers remain debated. Victims were shot, burned alive, or killed with machetes. Many women and children were raped or sexually assaulted. The soldiers also destroyed homes, farms, and belongings, leaving the village in ruins.

Initial Government Denials and Cover-up
